A broad interdisciplinary survey course which introduces students to the study of the territory presently known as Canada. Topics include human-environment relationships; Indigenous peoples and settler colonialism; the development of present-day cultural, political and economic systems; and the impact of U.S. - Canada relations. An understanding of Canada is valuable not only to provide a better understanding of a nearby neighbor, but also to gain a better understanding of the U.S. itself.